DIFFERENT TYPES OF BREEDING SITES: PROPORTION HAVING AEDES LARVAE

Analysis of the Entomological survey done for Dengue/ Chikungunya in the month of May 2018:

Entomological survey done in all the 26 districts reveals the following points:

Entomological indicators: out of 371 sites (286 urban area, 85 rural area) surveyed in 26 districts, aedes larvae were found in 316 sites (85.1%), out of which high larval indices were found in 26 sites of 9 districts (Alipurduar, Darjeeling Jalpaiguri, Murshidabad, N24 Pgs, Diamond Harbour, Uttar Dinajpur, Malda & Cooch Behar). Overall vector status represented by low, moderate and high vector indices has been shown in Annexure I.

A significant increase in vector breeding sites were noticed in discarded and unused containers. This may be due to the rains that occurred during the last month. (Pls see Annexure II).

Strengthening the Vector Control Teams (VCT) may be helpful in controlling vector breeding in such areas under the Panchayat as well as Urban bodies.

Out of the mentioned sites with high vector density, 6 sites of 6 districts (Darjeeling, N24 Pgs, Malda and Cooch Behar, Uttar Dinajpur, Diamond Harbour,) reported alarmingly high vector indices (House Index, Container Index &/or Breteau Index)

Careful monitoring of fever incidences is required at those places (details of the specific site has been attached in Annexure III) as these sites are posing potential threat for disease transmission.
